What's New In?

Q: (Just) the wine? Please take a look at this picture: It doesn't look like the person was drinking wine, or taking a sip; it looks like the person was drinking so they could pour it out to their left. The image: Is there a reason why the two times the man is holding the wine are tilted differently? A: The image is of a pot of red wine sitting on a table in front of a person: This is an illustration of Rhoncus hilaris, a type of bugs (specifically beetles). It's amazing how we can tell so much detail from these two lines. However, there are other things to note (e.g. the wine's thickness): There's not really any perspective distortion other than the reduction (and that's a normal one, not a reversed one): all the distances between objects remain the same, but the perspective has shortened and the wine has become thicker. This is probably because of the angle, and may be due to his (presumably strong) grip. We can't see any watermarks or anything. Q: Using NSArray objectAtIndex to access the objects in an UIPickerView I am having a difficult time accessing objects in an NSArray that are contained in an UIPickerView, when I am setting the data for it. I want to access my objects from an NSArray and be able to send it to the UIPickerView. -(NSInteger)numberOfComponentsInPickerView:(UIPickerView *)pickerView { return 1; } -(NSInteger)pickerView:(UIPickerView *)pickerView numberOfRowsInComponent:(NSInteger)component { return [self.objectArray count]; } -(NSString *)pickerView:(UIPickerView *)pickerView titleForRow:(NSInteger)row forComponent:(NSInteger)component { return [self.objects objectAtIndex:row]; } - (void)pickerView:(UIPickerView *)pickerView didSelectRow:(NSInteger)row inComponent:(NSInteger)component { NSString *theSelectedWord = [self.
